30 January 2008

Title: The Beginning of the End for Cervical Cancer? Venue: The Main Lecture Theatre, Royal Society of Medicine, London, UK. Details: Carcinoma of the uterine cervix may not be the commonest cancer in women but the relatively young incidence and invasive potential of the tumour underline its importance. Previous strategies to contain and cure the disease have depended upon early diagnosis provided by cytological screening. Immunisation against human papillomavirus (HPV) now offers the prospect of neutralising the main causative factor. This conference will review current methods of detection before considering the likelihood of preventing HPV infection plus the psychological and logistic aspects of such a policy. Accreditation: 5 CPD. Information: Fenella Williams, Academic Department, Royal Society of Medicine, 1 Wimpole Street, London, W1G 0AE, UK. Tel: +44 (0) 20 7290 2965. Fax: +44 (0) 20 7290 2989. E-mail: Fenella.williams@rsm.ac.uk.
